- BioNEST is a bio incubator that established with goals to give impetus to translation of innovative research
- BioNEST provides incubation support through laboratory space and infrastructure (bench spaces/lab modules), technical support.
- This facility has many instruments that are used in development of various bio actives for industrial and agricultural sectors
- First we visited room where fermentator of different capacity ranging from 5-300 litre
- We got to know about working, parts, principle of fermenter controlled by computers itself.
- After that saw downstream processing facility like ultrafiltration unit, spray dryer, table top freezer dryer, industrial freeze dryer, laminar air flow, and analytical facility like HPLC Chromatography and gas chromatography.
- After that we visited Prof. Khasa sir lab where he demonstrated how to use fermenter and also showed different part of fermenters
- We also interact with Prof. Khasa's students they all explained working principle of size exclusion chromatography, PCR and sonicator.
- It was worth visiting there in which we got to know about fermenters and other instrument and their working principles.

UNVEILING MYCOPROTEINS

Mycoprotein ("protein from fungus"), also known as mycelium-based protein or fungal protein, is a form of single-cell protein derived from fungi for human consumption.

Mycoprotein is low energy and protein-rich whole food source derived from the fermentation of filamentous fungus such as Fusarium venenatum, the most recognized fungi within the food industry given its use for production on a large industrial scale.

2ND Experimental Evidence (Using Aphids)

- An analysis of phloem exudate provides more direct evidence in support of the conclusion that photoassimilates are translocated through the phloem.
- Unfortunately, phloem tissue does not lend itself to analysis as easily as xylem tissue does. This is because the translocating elements in the phloem are, unlike xylem vessels and tracheids, living cells when functional. These cells contain a dense, metabolically active cytoplasm and, because of an inherent sealing action of its cytoplasm, do not exude their content as readily as do xylem vessels. Moreover, phloem contains numerous parenchyma cells that, while not directly involved in the transport process, do provide contaminating cytoplasm.
- Cutting the stems of some herbaceous plants will produce an exudate of largely phloem origin, but in some plants, such as some representatives of the family Cucurbitaceae, the exudate may quickly gel on contact with oxygen, making collection and subsequent analysis difficult.
